

Due to predictions of snow and poor driving conditions, Fort-to-Fort trip was altered to Burnaby Lake. The day actually turned out to be clear and sunny, with few people on the trails. There were far more birds at Piper Spit than in spring or summer, with numerous species of ducks present, and even a couple of red-winged blackbirds. The lake was partially frozen but the pathways around it were in great condition. With most leaves off the trees, there were excellent views of the mountains. A fine local experience!
