

Brohm Lake – March 25, 2021

This hike had been scheduled for Sunday (Mar 21), but heavy rain & wet snow was forecast for the Sunday, so we postponed till the following Thursday, when the sun was promised to be shining!

Five of us met at 9:30am at the trail-head and, as promised, the sun was shining brightly. We hiked the trail which winds around Brohm Lake and, at various stages, inclines quite steeply up and down to take advantage of viewpoints. Later, as we ate our lunches on a rocky bluff near the old fire lookout, the sky was a glorious shade of blue and snow on the Tantalus Range of mountains was positively glowing in the bright sun.

We noticed abundant mosses which were growing on trees and hanging from branches in long strands. Skunk Cabbages were starting to bud as were a few Salmon Berry bushes – Spring was definitely trying to spring!

After about 5 hours, which included time for a leisurely lunch and stops to enjoy view-points, we were back at the cars. We decided it had been a good idea to delay this hike, the weather on this day had been perfect.

Photo credits: David Cater